Mainstreaming climate and security into the work of the UN and partner organizations is an essential yet severely overlooked dimension of climate action. Bringing attention to the security implications of climate change will mobilize not just Member States but also other stakeholders (civil society, private sector, other International Organizations) to better understand and act against the security implications of climate change.

This depends in part on persuading a number of key players, among them permanent seat holders at the Security Council, that the security implications of climate change are not overblown or inaccurate. Moreover, there is interest and even urgency on the part of senior UN officials from all three pillars of the architecture- development, human rights and peace and security- regarding integrating climate and security into a preventive approach.
